Spelling is one of the biggest, and most widely experienced difficulties for the dyslexic child and adult. Most dyslexic people can learn to read well with the right support, however, spelling appears to be a difficulty that persists throughout life. It's not entirely understood why this is the case.

Spelling - British Dyslexia Association

For some people with dyslexia, learning to spell may be even harder than learning to read. Computer spellchecking can be a good support for older kids and adults, but it won't help build spelling skills. The right teaching and tools can help people who struggle with spelling for different reasons.

Many individuals with dyslexia learn to read fairly well, but difficulties with spelling (and handwriting) tend to persist throughout life, requiring instruction, accommodations, task modifications, and understanding from those who teach or work with the individual.

Spelling and Dyslexia | Reading Rockets

Dyslexia is considered a language-based learning disorder and is thought of as a reading disability but it also impacts a student's ability to write. There is often a large discrepancy between what a student thinks and can tell you orally and what he can write down on paper. Besides frequent spelling errors, some of the ways dyslexia affects writing skills:

How Dyslexia Impacts Writing Skills - ThoughtCo

Dyslexia is a specific learning difficulty that affects a person's ability to accurately read and spell. Not everyone that has reading and spelling difficulties has dyslexia. People with dyslexia generally need more targeted, specific teaching over a longer period of time to help them improve reading and spelling skills.
